Description

English 600 supports the new graduate Teaching Interns (TIs) and Teaching Assistants (TAs) in the Freshman English program by introducing them to the pedagogy of first-year composition—including theories of composition, classroom management, course preparation and lesson plans, writing assignment design, evaluation of students, and digital technologies for writing. The course proceeds through lecture, demonstration, readings, discussions, and practice teaching designed to develop professional confidence in graduate teaching assistants as they teach the university's core requirement in written communication. In English 600, our assignments will center on the course requirements for English 103 and the demands of teaching First-Year Composition.

Requirements

1. Attend the pre-semester seminar August 17-21 and meet three times a week throughout the semester in the designated classroom at the designated time. Please notify one of the instructors in advance if you cannot attend any session.
2. Participate in online and in-class discussion and impromptu activities. Minimum of one online discussion post per reading assignment.
3. Teach a mini lesson to the seminar at the end of the first week of meetings and participate as a leader of class discussion on assigned readings once during the semester.
4. Use Blackboard and email to communicate with your students.
5. Collaboratively develop prompts for the three to four essay assignments.
6. Return student writing within five working days from the time it was submitted.
7. Assemble a draft reflective electronic teaching portfolio including at least 1000 words of reflection. The portfolio must be submitted at the end of the semester to pass.
8. Fulfill professional development requirement by attending at least two approved professional development events.
9. Be observed by one ENGL 600 co-teacher, and meet with observer to discuss your teaching.
10. Observe, and be observed by at least one other ENGL 600 colleague, and submit a brief report on your observation.

Texts (required)
- English 103 texts TBA.
- Irene Clark, Concepts in Composition, Second edition
- Erika Lindemann, A Rhetoric for Writing Teachers, Fourth Edition
- Online articles TBA

Description
This course introduces students to key elements of literary scholarship: research, documentation, and textual and bibliographic studies, including analytic, descriptive, and enumerative bibliography. The course also covers aspects of the history of the book. Classes will generally include lecture, discussion, and, often, some sort of hands-on exercise. Some meetings may take place in the library.

Requirements
Regular attendance, reading, and participation; three or four shorter written assignments (around 1000 words each) and one longer paper or project (2500-3750 words). Some online discussion posts, through Blackboard.

Description

A survey of the current state of academic literary criticism, and some of the major moments in the development of the theory of literature, since roughly the middle of the last century. Besides critical writings, the syllabus includes a healthy dose of primary literary works, representing different genres and time periods, so that we can consider how these compositions could be, or have been, approached in various theoretical frameworks.

Requirements

Class presentation; two shorter essays (5 pp. minimum) and a longer essay (15 pp. minimum); final exam.

Texts (required)

Amanda Anderson, Rita Felski, and Toril Moi, Character (U of Chicago P); William Blake, Selected Poems (Oxford World’s Classics); Jorge Luis Borges, Labyrinths (New Directions); Jonathan Culler, Theory of the Lyric (Harvard UP); Henry James, The Aspern Papers and Other Tales (Penguin); Edward Said, Selected Works (Vintage); Muriel Spark, The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie (Harper Perennial); René Wellek and Austin Warren, Theory of Literature (Dalkey Archive); John Webster, The Duchess of Malfi (Norton Critical Edition).

Description

When in 1876 Walt Whitman hailed the “lawless music” of a “Locomotive in Winter,” the railroad industry was both a national wonder and an economic juggernaut, a force driving American economic and territorial expansion but also sweeping aside concerns of laborers and legislatures. This seminar focuses upon the period of dramatic American railroad expansion: from 1840, when a national total of some 3,000 miles of rail roughly equaled canal mileage, to World War I, when there were over 240,000 miles of operating railroad. But it also considers later ramifications of the railroad right up to the present, when rail systems continue to do much of the heavy lifting in our human rearrangement of the material world, having already established cravings for speed and volume that have only grown in our digital, consumerist and apocalyptic era. Meanwhile, American literature has been along for the ride, offering in both canonical and non-canonical texts a chronicle of the railroad’s advance and its connections throughout US politics and life.
We will examine the railroad as motif and historical phenomenon facilitating the literary exploration of labor and power relations along many different cultural axes: the dispossession of Native Americans, capitalist competition among the so-called Robber Barons, labor struggle, the exploitation of Chinese labor, race and racism. We will even consider the role of the railroad in the world wars and the Holocaust. The seminar also provides a rich occasion to become acquainted with, and to debate the issues within, a number of fields important in contemporary literary and cultural criticism: Foucauldian, Marxist, and feminist theories of power; studies of material culture; archival research; literature and technology, including the recently emerging realm of Posthuman Studies. Readings will include criticism and theory in these fields. Finally, because dime novels were designed in large part for reading aboard trains and many of these novels were about trains, we will be doing hands-on research in the outstanding dime-novel collections housed at NIU’s Rare Book and Special Collections library.

Requirements

Class attendance and active participation in discussion; one class presentation and one short essay; a research prospectus and major research paper.

Texts (required)

Walt Whitman, “To a Locomotive in Winter”

Description
This is a class in the craft and discipline of writing poetry. The focus of the workshop: to study poetry and, though intensive poetic practice, to work toward developing poetic voice. You will read and respond to a number of books and essays, write poems, continually revise these outside of class toward the final project. The final project will be your work, revised as fully as possible, with a prefatory essay on poetics.

Requirements
Attentive and thoughtful reading and response papers to weekly assignments, regular attendance, thoughtful balanced participation in critique, application of reading material to your own work and to other’s works, revision, portfolio.

Description
In this course we will take a descriptive approach to the study of structure of English, although illustrations and exercises will be drawn from other languages as well. We will focus on the analytical problem solving tools on phonetics, phonology, morphology, syntax, semantics, and discuss pragmatics as well as topics on how language and other disciplines interface: brain and language, language acquisition, second language acquisition, historical linguistics, and computational linguistics. The focus will be on understanding human language in general with its universal properties and English in particular. There are no prerequisites, and no background in linguistics is necessary.

Description
This course will take up two major strands: (1) rhetoric, from the perspective of how researchers have broadly conceived its historical periods, and (2) composition studies, from the perspective of its emergence and growth as an academic discipline. Among the topics covered: the course’s materials, discussions, and projects will take up the robust range of scholarship that falls under the rubric of rhetoric/composition, its related methodological approaches to research, questions germane to professional development in the discipline, and the position that rhetoric/composition is likely to assume in 21st-century post-secondary education. This course is particularly germane to M.A. and Ph.D. students interested in developing a thesis or dissertation topic grounded in relevant previous rhetoric/composition-related research.

Objectives:
1. Acquire a general understanding of the theories, practices, and research that have historically shaped Rhetoric and Composition as a disciplinary field within English studies
2. Gain familiarity with the development of scholarship in rhetoric and composition—specifically regarding the emergence of major academic journals
3. Review major trends of research in rhetoric and composition, as well as major areas of historical research.
4. Examine the influence of digital writing on the future of research in the field.

Requirements
· Prepare brief responses to assigned readings
· Complete impromptu written exercises in class
· Conduct a brief interview with a publishing scholar in the field of rhetoric and composition
· Compile an annotated bibliography on a topic of interest in rhetoric and composition
· Write a research review on a chosen topic

[Combined with ENGL 479]

Description

This course equips prospective teachers with the procedures for the planning and delivery of instruction related to the reading and analysis of literature for students in middle school and high school. Participants will study the competing approaches to the study of literature and the diverse perspectives that influence critical judgment, and will plan experiences that will involve adolescent learners in joining the conversations about the interpretation and evaluation of texts. Course participants will work with a variety of literary genres and literary environments, and examine both the texts that are most commonly taught in middle schools and high schools and other texts of high literary merit that are under-represented in the schools.

Requirements

The course requires regular attendance, the completion of assigned readings, and preparation for active participation in class discussions and demonstrations. The series of short papers require responses to the readings and case studies and the synthesis of thought about the instructional issues explored in class. Each class participant will prepare instructional plans that will support clinical experiences and student teaching.

Texts (required)

Beers, K. & Probst, R. Note and Notice. Heinemann, 2012; McCann, T.M., Johannessen, L.R., Kahn, E., &

[Combined with ENGL 480A]

Description

English 648/480 prepares prospective teachers of middle and high school students for the contemporary English language arts classroom. The class draws from current theory, research, and practice related to the teaching of English. Students will have several opportunities to apply theory and research in practical, concrete ways. English 648/480 serves prospective teachers in two general ways: to assist candidates in continuing the transformation from student to professional English language arts teacher and to develop the knowledge base that will serve as the foundation for successful application of pedagogical knowledge and skills.

Requirements

The course requires readings from the required texts, reflective statements about the readings and discussions, collaboration on instructional activities and assessments, thorough instructional unit plans, appropriate progress on the teacher licensure portfolio, and the completion of the final examination.

Texts (required)

Description

This course will introduce you to a wide and varied range of British, Irish, and post-colonial authors. Though our primary historical backdrop will be one of Empire and the two World Wars, we will also devote special attention to experimental versus “accessible” traditions; English isolationism and the recent “Brexit” transition; profanity, social class, and politics; private versus public identity; British architecture; and the gender-charged saga of Poet Laureate Ted Hughes and his relationship with Sylvia Plath. Other authors include Thomas Hardy, Mina Loy, W.H. Auden, Charlotte Mew, W.B. Yeats, Eavan Boland, Grace Nichols, Carol Ann Duffy, Derek Walcott, and Philip Larkin.
Requirements

Students will compose one conference-length formal research essay in addition to several short response papers, give a presentation on an unassigned author, and take two exams.

Description

This class focuses on American modernism/postmodernism, but three foreign texts will “float” throughout the syllabus and the discussions. Virginia Woolf’s Mrs. Dalloway and James Joyce's "The Dead" will be used as literary resources for European modernism, especially the notion that modernists felt nostalgia for the past. Students who enroll in this class should have read both works before coming to class so that they can use them in the discussion on the meaning of modernism that will probably explode on the first day of class. They should also have read Albert Camus' The Stranger because, like the other "floating" texts in this syllabus, this book influenced not only the content of many American novels but also the theory behind that content, especially the work that we now consider postmodernist.

Although the reading list for this class is extensive, the students are ONLY REQUIRED to read the first title on the list for that particular class day. This means that the required reading for any day will only be one text, a novel, a poem, or a play; however, it would be nice if the student had read the other texts on the line for that particular day, but this is not required. The discussion, however, will probably veer in the direction of those other texts as well as the "floating" texts on a regular basis. We are trying to understand how modernism and/or postmodernism figures in American literature since the work of the early modernists was first published, so it is important that we include as many texts as can possibly be included in order to make sense of this beast, modernism/postmodernism.

I have chosen to leave out the work of minority or ethnic writers for several reasons. The most important reason is that the work of most ethnic writers started appearing after the 1970s, so it has automatically been considered postmodernist. The second reason is that I wanted to leave out of the discussion the obvious ethnic themes of race, ethnicity, and identity so that we could focus on the themes important to the "majority" or mainstream writers. In other words, I wanted to look at the work of white writers, males and females, in conjunction with some of the theories that have evolved in the last one hundred years.

Description

This course will explore some of the many and varied ways in which the works of Shakespeare have been put on film. What kinds of appropriations, adaptations, and (in some cases) transformations have they undergone, and to what ends? The course will not only involve the viewing and discussion of various films, but also a close look at Shakespeare’s texts and the ways in which the medium of film has facilitated or necessitated their modification.

Requirements

One in-class oral presentation, one formal response to a classmate’s presentation, weekly short response papers relating to a given week’s materials, and a research paper will be required assignments for the course. Class attendance and active participation are mandatory and expected.

Texts (required)

An edition of the Complete Works of Shakespeare (I recommend the Riverside Shakespeare, second edition); critical articles and films TBA.

Description

This course may be taken upon selection of a thesis director and two additional readers and approval of a prospectus. Approval of the thesis prospectus by all committee members should be obtained at least one semester in advance of enrollment in 699. A student writing a thesis must register in 699 in the semester in which he or she plans to defend the thesis. Once enrolled in 699, continuous enrollment is required, including summers, until the thesis is submitted to and formally approved by the Graduate School.

Description
This course focuses on the process of preparing an essay for submission to a peer-reviewed journal in English. Students begin with a previously prepared essay to revise over the course of the semester. They present a conference-length version of this research, and they participate in peer-editing workshops and consider appropriate journals for their essays. They also learn how to write cover letters and abstracts, to publish book reviews, and to develop book proposals. Although this course takes a practical approach to scholarly publication, we also consider throughout the semester how one might define scholarly success in this field. Students develop their professional skills and a research agenda that will encourage future success.

Requirements
A variety of brief assignments, a conference-style presentation, and multiple revisions of a previously written essay.

Texts (required)
Will be provided via Blackboard.
